Racial Equity

Racial equity refers to what a genuinely non-racist society would look like. In a racially equitable society, the distribution of society’s benefits and burdens would not be skewed by race. In other words, racial equity would be a reality in which a person is no more or less likely to experience society’s benefits or burdens just because of the color of their skin. This is in contrast to the current state of affairs in which a person of color is more likely to live in poverty, be imprisoned, drop out of high school, be unemployed and experience poor health outcomes like diabetes, heart disease, depression and other potentially fatal diseases. Racial equity holds society to a higher standard. It demands that we pay attention not just to individual-level discrimination, but to overall social outcomes.

Resilience

The process of adapting well in the face of adversity, trauma, tragedy, threats or significant sources of stress.

Systemic Racism

A system in which public policies, institutional practices, cultural representations, and other norms work in various, often reinforcing ways to perpetuate racial group inequity. It identifies dimensions of our history and culture that have allowed privileges associated with “whiteness” and disadvantages associated with “color” to endure and adapt over time. Structural racism is not something that a few people or institutions choose to practice. Instead it has been a feature of the social, economic and political systems in which we all exist.

Critical Race Theory

An analytical framework that stems from the field of critical legal studies that addresses the racial inequities in society.
Using the perspective of yourself, your community, and your colleagues:

- What does the racial justice movement look like?
- Who are your sources of strengths? Why?
- What learnings from this webinar can be applied?
- What can we do TODAY to reduce the need for resiliency?
Center for Work and Family Life

CWFL staff remain available to help with mental health concerns during the coronavirus pandemic. Highly-trained clinicians can help you with well-being, stress, anxiety, and other issues. Phone lines are open and remote sessions can be scheduled by Zoom or teleconference for any staff, faculty, their families, and retirees. This is a free service for USC employees.

Call us 24/7 at 213-821-0800 to find out more about counseling and other services.

Office of Campus Wellbeing and Education

CWE focuses on the environment, culture, and systems so all members of the USC community can thrive. Our clinical and organizational psychologists consult privately with individuals, campus groups, departments and schools on issues ranging from building trust, healing from transgressions, and preventing burnout to improving engagement, communicating effectively, and adapting to change. We listen, learn with you, and provide research-backed recommendations and evaluations of new ways to work together more collaboratively, purposefully and productively.
